One of the strangestand queerest sights Declara ions of Principles of a Party on the streets of Washington is a young fellow who dresses in the most eccentric Corr and extravagant fashion. He wears a pair of boots with heels fully four inches high. His cost sleeves are so long that they cover the tips of his fingers, and even beyond that he has a pair of enor-mous cuffs. This young man is a son of wealthy parents and is generally regarded as being a trifle off. One of his peculiarities is a love with his own figure. He thinks he is the handsomest man alive. He rents an office in an uptown building to which no one save only a favored few are admitted. This room he has arranged so that walls and ceilings entirely covered with mir-Strange stories are told of the young man's actions in this apartment. It is said he will remain there for hours admiring himself as reflected in the glass, all the while cutting up the most extraordinary antics. On the street he never looks to the right nor to the left. He never speaks to anyone unless first ad-drossed. Several times he has been guyed by young fellows, who thought they could have a lark at his expense. guyed by young fellows, who thought they could have a lark at his expense. In each and every instance they have been soundly thrashed, for he is one of the most expert and scientific sparrers in the city. This man is one of Washington's most notable oddities.

Mitchell's seat in the senate. Incidentally he is supposed to be interested in tariff legislation, and will fight the Morrison bill in the ways and means committee.

Lamar is thus interestingly told by Col. J. D. Elliott: "Sam Randall deserved J. D. Elliott: infinite credit for the successful parliamentary fight he made on the Force bill, but without Lamar's assistance the battle would have been tost. He said to Lamar, who fought with equal courage and ability in the crisis of the controversy, that he could kill time no longer by an appeal to the rules. Both, for three days and nights, had gone without sleep or rest. Lamar staggered under the remark of Randall, and in the spirit of desperation, in a brief recess of the house, wandered through the corridors, he knew not where. Quite to his surprise he found himself Quite to his surprise he found himself in the presence of Blaine, who rallied him on his dejected, haggard loe's, and inquired the cause. He remained that the game was ended—the Sorth must go under. Blaine, who was at heart opposed to the act, asked him why he did not call for the reading of the three days' proceedings, which right could not be denied to a member. As quick as thought he has tened back to Randall and reported the result. The call for the reading was then made, which would of itself have consumed. made, which would of itself have consumed over a haif day's time, and thereby closed the session, when the adversary, per-ceiving the advantage thus gained, sur-rendered the contest. The fight was abandoned and the victory won."

George Alfred Townsend, who is commonly known as "Gath," is probably the most successful newspaper man in the United States. The Cincinnati Enquirer pays him $10,000 a year for a certain number of letters a week, and it is estimated that his income from newspaper work. that his income from newspaper work alone is not less than $25,000 per annum. It is a strange fact that so successful a newspaper man never revises his matter after dictating it. He travels through the country, visiting the principal cities.

13. To secure to both sexos equal pay for equal work.

14. The establishment of a national several times each year, and in every prominent city he has a stenographer in whom he reposes the utmost confidence. He usually works in the afternoon, say from 4 to 6 o'clock, and in that time will dictate from five to eight thousand words. He has a wonderful faculty for dictating, and is well primed with the facts in the subject which he is handling. Indeed his fund of information is inexhaustible. When the stenographer has attained the maximum limit of a lotter, say from two to three thousand words. Mr. Townsend will stop talking, but till that period is reached he never hesitates in his dictation.

There is no doubt that "Gath's" name is worth considerable to the papers to which he contributes, and they can well affort to pay him the enormous salary for his productions, which are eagerly read by an appreciative public.
